

Tuanku Muhriz, accompanied by Youth and Sports Minister Hannah Yeoh, posing with members of the Negri Sembilan wushu team after presenting them with certificates for their achievements.

Tuanku Muhriz, accompanied by his sons Tunku Ali Redhaudin and Tunku Zain Al-Abidin (right) during a visit to Hospital Chancelor Tuanku Muhriz UKM shortly after the New Year. Tunku Zain thanked the hospital's doctors, nurses, and staff for their dedication during the holiday period. — Photo from Tunku Zain's Instagram

An educated generation is the most valuable asset

> FROM PAGE 2

"As with your other programmes, this assistance is given to persons irrespective of their race and religion.

"The projects you have undertaken show your strong spirit of voluntary service. I applaud the club for its good work, and urge that you expand the scope of your initiatives for the benefit of society, in keeping with your motto of Service Above Self," the Ruler said.

Recognising the transformative power of a good education, the Ruler continues to champion various causes to ensure access to quality education for all students, with a special focus on those from underprivileged backgrounds.

In June, Tuanku Muhriz graced the graduation ceremony of Sekolah Menengah Sains Tuanku Munawir, a top-tier secondary school in Seremban, where he stressed the importance of quality education.

"Every child in this country has the right to access quality education regardless of their socio-economic background.

"Education enables people to improve their quality of life and that of their families, helping them overcome challenges in a competitive world.

"An educated generation is the most valuable asset in nation-building and enables the country to stay on par with other developed nations," he said.

Tuanku Muhriz also urged the young graduates to further their education and pursue studies that suit their talent and inclination.

He reminded those still in school to actively participate in co-curricular events because success is not only measured by examination results.

"Good character and manners can't be learnt from books but are shaped from experiences and skills in co-curricular activities.

"These attributes are essential when pursuing higher education," he said.

The Ruler inculcated many of these values and his sense of righteousness as a young law student at the University of Wales, Aberystwyth (now Aberystwyth University), where he graduated with an LLB (Hons) in 1970.

When he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate of Laws by the UK's University of Glamorgan in 2013, Tuanku Muhriz recounted his university days with nostalgia and affection in a speech that offered insight into his strong sense of doing what's right.

"The time one spends as an undergraduate at a university is an important one in one's life. For me, this period between that of a schoolboy and growing up to be an independent and responsible person took place in Aberystwyth and Wales.

"Every good university education provides a training of the mind, the ability to reason and organise, giving one the tools to get started in life.

"In the course of studying law, one also learns an important aspect of how humanity has learned to govern itself and provide order to society.

"Even in this short period covered in one's course of study, the changes to the laws within that period reveal how society strives to improve and refine its rules of establishing order, to determine what is right or wrong, to achieve justice," he said in his acceptance speech.

Although the Ruler went on to carve a corporate career spanning banking, finance and advertising, he has always been guided by the principles of equality and justice — values that he has reiterated since ascending the throne in 2009.

The Ruler's unwavering commitment to duty, vision for a brighter future for all Malaysians irrespective of race or religion, and advocacy of fair play and justice endeared Tuanku Muhriz to the people. May his reign be blessed with continued success, good health and prosperity. Daulat Tuanku!

Menteri Besar Datuk Seri Aminuddin Harun welcoming Tuanku Muhriz at the state-level Merdeka Day celebration held at Padang MBS in Seremban.

Tuanku Muhriz officially opening the RM540mil state-of-the-art Dutch Lady Milk Industries facility at Bandar Enstek.